Introduction	xv
PART I WRITING AND EVENT	1
1 Writer of The BLANK Swan	3
1.1 Prediction versus Prescription	3
1.1.1 My private Black Swan	3
1.1.2 Pierre Menard's trading room	4
1.1.3 Probability, replication, context and beyond	4
1.1.4 Contingency	5
1.1.5 The process of change of contexts	6
1.1.6 Writing the Black Swan	7
1.1.7 Finding the context in The Black Swan	8
1.1.8 Writing back yards	9
1.1.9 Poetry and The Black Swan	10
1.2 Generalizing Prediction	11
1.2.1 Postponing history	11
1.2.2 Incompatible contexts	11
1.2.3 Knowledge as prediction	13
1.2.4 True empiricism	14
1.2.5 Meta-contextual prediction and backward causality	15
1.3 The Derivatives Market	18
1.3.1 Possibility, capacity and the market of contingent claims	18
1.3.2 Market mechanics	19
1.3.3 Price and the implicate ontology	19
1.3.4 Technology of the future	21
1.3.5 Context change and the necessity of jumps	23
1.3.6 The 'derivative-derivative' trader	24
1.3.7 Bringing the Black Swan to nest	25
1.3.8 The regime-switching model as a meta-contextual pricing tool	26
1.3.9 'Transcendental deduction' of the derivatives market	27
1.3.10 A return to history	28

2	The Writing of Derivatives	31
2.1	First Steps on the Surface	31
2.1.1	Theoretical speculation versus speculation	32
2.1.2	Rethinking probability	33
2.1.3	Nonarbitrage	34
2.1.4	Writing, difference and deferral	37
2.1.5	Reality of the market: the virtual	38
2.2	Introducing Contingency	40
2.2.1	Derivative writing as an alternative to metaphysics	40
2.2.2	Inverting the logic	41
2.2.3	Present value versus present price	42
2.2.4	Derivative technology	43
2.2.5	From derivatives to contingent claims	45
2.2.6	The medium of contingency	46
2.2.7	Possibility versus capacity	47
2.2.8	Immanent differentiation and univocal contingency	49
2.3	The Pricing Surface	51
2.3.1	Reversibility of pricing and absolute market	51
2.3.2	Price and exchange	54
2.3.3	The two faces of price and reversion to the surface	55
2.3.4	The liquidity and the fold of price	56
2.3.5	The new metaphysics of liquidity and of the past of prices	58
3	The Event of the Market	61
3.1	From States of the World to Market Prices	61
3.1.1	The market, a place of exchange not of prediction	61
3.1.2	Value versus price	63
3.1.3	Elements of financial valuation theory	63
3.1.4	The advent of derivatives and market prices as states of the world	64
3.2	The Black–Scholes–Merton Paradigm	65
3.2.1	Price process and Brownian motion	65
3.2.2	The Black–Scholes revolution and derivative pricing theory	66
3.2.3	The dynamic replication of derivative instruments	67
3.2.4	A universal pricing formula	68
3.3	The Critique of Derivative Pricing Theory	70
3.3.1	The real consequences of derivative pricing theory	70
3.3.2	The very special mode of being of the market	71
3.3.3	The market as given	72
3.3.4	The market as the ‘inversion’ of theory or the ambivalence of price	73
3.4	The Necessity of Meta-Contextual Ascent	75
3.4.1	A new ‘logic’ for a new science	75
3.4.2	New generations, endless generation	77
3.4.3	The necessity of the context and the necessity of its surpassing	77
3.4.4	A meta-contextual pricing tool	79
3.4.5	Technology of the future versus knowledge of the future	82
3.4.6	The performative surpassing of representation and possibility	83

4 Writing and the Market	87
4.1 Pierre Menard	87
4.1.1 The reality of contingency	87
4.1.2 The im-possibility of history	89
4.1.3 Writing history	91
4.1.4 The very sad writing of Pierre Menard	92
4.1.5 The differential definition of writing and the unpredictability of the Quixote	95
4.1.6 The past of possibility	97
4.2 Reading and Writing	100
4.2.1 The significance of replication and the turn to the virtual	100
4.2.2 Writing as forgetting	103
4.2.3 Anti-memory as trading and literary creation	104
4.2.4 The resurfacing of writing	107
4.3 Approaching the Market	108
4.3.1 Univocity of the market	108
4.3.2 Immanence of the market	111
4.3.3 The sense of the market	113
4.3.4 Announcing the genesis of the market	115
4.3.5 Originality of price and of the market	116
4.3.6 The Blank Swan	118
PART II ABSOLUTE CONTINGENCY AND THE RETURN OF SPECULATION	123
5 The Necessity of Contingency	125
5.1 Against Speculation	125
5.1.1 Writing history (reprise)	125
5.1.2 The writer's (and trader's) body	126
5.1.3 Beyond possibility, capacity and ethics: a political interlude	128
5.1.4 State of power	129
5.1.5 The absolute	131
5.1.6 Absolute irony	132
5.2 Speculative Materialism	132
5.2.1 Speculative metaphysics	132
5.2.2 The shortcoming of Kant's critical philosophy	133
5.2.3 Meillassoux's proposition: the absolute necessity of contingency	134
5.2.4 Is the absolute thinkable?	136
5.2.5 The absolutization of facticity	137
5.2.6 Positively thinking the absolute	138
5.2.7 Chaos, yet not without structure	139
6 Passage to the Future	143
6.1 From Possibility to Inexistence	143
6.1.1 The passing of the possible	144
6.1.2 Factual ontology	145
6.1.3 Cantor's set theory as meta-ontology	146

6.1.4	Factual derivation of the un-totalization	147
6.1.5	Effective contingency versus absolute contingency	148
6.1.6	Speculative result versus metaphysical result	149
6.2	The Passage	150
6.2.1	The future and the world	150
6.2.2	Passage to the future	151
6.2.3	Gravity of the world	152
6.2.4	The quality of happening	153
6.2.5	Turning the future on	155
6.3	The Future	156
6.3.1	Badiou and Deleuze	156
6.3.2	Ontologizing the passage	157
6.3.3	Cutting to the future	158
6.3.4	A paper rotation	159
6.3.5	Keeping only the future	160
7	Necessity of the Future	163
7.1	A Model World	163
7.1.1	Derivatives world	163
7.1.2	The event of trading the derivative	164
7.1.3	Exchange as fundamental ontology	166
7.1.4	The market as the exchange of knowledge	167
7.1.5	The market as the process of history	168
7.1.6	Arche-exchange	168
7.2	The Implied Absolute	169
7.2.1	The absolute is in the inversion	169
7.2.2	Why derivative pricing is not a human science	171
7.2.3	The implied volatility smile is the absolute truth	173
7.2.4	Implication is faster than thought	174
7.2.5	The market as the last absolute	175
8	Necessity of Writing	177
8.1	Radical Speculation	177
8.1.1	Elevating implication	177
8.1.2	The 'What?' question	178
8.1.3	Thinking speculation reflexively	178
8.1.4	Critical speculation	179
8.1.5	Absolute speculation	181
8.1.6	Implication as the radicalization of speculation	182
8.2	The Pricing Alternative	183
8.2.1	Price as a crossing	183
8.2.2	The absolutization of mathematics	183
8.2.3	The mathematics of price	184
8.2.4	Price as the exchange of metaphysics and possibility	186
8.2.5	The 'letter' of the necessity of contingency	187
8.2.6	Immanence and materiality of price	188

8.3 From the Market to Work		189
8.3.1 Price is the other of thought		189
8.3.2 Meillassoux's body		190
8.3.3 The work (of the trader, of the poet)		191
8.3.4 Writing the world		192
PART III FLIGHT TO SYDNEY, OR THE GENESIS OF THE BOOK		195
9 The Mathematics of Price		197
9.1 The Absolute without Thought		197
9.1.1 Mathematical thinkability		197
9.1.2 The absolute without necessity		199
9.1.3 Impossible exchange		201
9.1.4 Writing as nonmetaphysical speculation		203
9.2 The Absolute within Thought		205
9.2.1 Philosophy of the event		205
9.2.2 Necessity as tension		208
9.2.3 The event of thought		209
9.2.4 Deep necessity versus superficial speculation		211
9.2.5 The cohesion of thought		212
10 Barton Fink		217
10.1 The Pledge		217
10.1.1 Passivity of thought and the exchange surface		217
10.1.2 Fiction, fabrication and dynamic programming		219
10.1.3 The first mark on the surface		221
10.1.4 The partition		222
10.2 The Turn		224
10.2.1 The turn of the world		224
10.2.2 The violence in movie-making		225
10.2.3 The probability distribution		228
10.2.4 Partition of the world and shoe distribution		229
10.2.5 The bellhop		232
10.2.6 Time frame and deadline		233
10.2.7 Woman, or the end of the partition		234
10.2.8 The sum total of possibilities and the problem in the head office		235
11 The Narrative Adventure		237
11.1 The Line of Flight		237
11.1.1 The other end of the world		237
11.1.2 The book of derivatives		238
11.1.3 Tour du monde versus point of the world		239
11.1.4 Flight to Sydney, or the retro-adventure		241
11.2 The POINT of the World		243
11.2.1 Flight to the virtual		243
11.2.2 Eternal turn versus eternal return		246
11.2.3 Writing after the departure of possibility		247

11.2.4	The narrative from the point of the world	249
11.2.5	The Australian bank, book and market	250
12	Out of the Box	253
12.1	The Purple Gastropod	253
12.1.1	Quants and the enterprise-wide system	253
12.1.2	Integration versus differentiation	254
12.1.3	How to be Australian	255
12.1.4	Creators of a boîte	257
12.1.5	After dinner	259
12.2	The Point of Return, the Point of Inversion	261
12.2.1	The mark, the market and the point of return of the world	261
12.2.2	Turning the world into a point, inverting the surface	263
12.2.3	Blindness and insight	264
12.2.4	Inverting the world, and the only remaining question	265
12.2.5	From theory to the narrative adventure, to the only remaining book	268
12.3	How to be a Writer	269
12.3.1	My place as a writer	269
12.3.2	My memory of the market	272
12.3.3	Walking on my head	276
12.3.4	Double writer, double trajectory	279
13	The Prestige	283
13.1	Finding the Market, Binding the Book	283
13.1.1	Reversibility between the book and the market	283
13.1.2	Sydney process and writing process	286
13.1.3	Marketing the philosophy book, and my trademark	287
13.1.4	The infinite duration of writing	288
13.1.5	The question of the book, the equation of the book	291
13.2	Absolute Deterritorialization	293
13.2.1	Making the point of the market	293
13.2.2	Head office and blank box	298
13.2.3	The revolutionary and virtual exotic market	300
13.2.4	How the plane of immanence takes precedence	303
14	The Geographical Process	305
14.1	The Field of Ruins	305
14.1.1	Ancient Greece, the market and Australia	305
14.1.2	The market as field of ruins and geographical process	306
14.1.3	The method of the intuition of the market	308
14.1.4	The becoming of the book and the pressing of the ruins	310
14.1.5	The dwelling of the virtual and the implosion of the ruins	313
14.1.6	The book after the market and the cross of history	314
14.1.7	Pulling out the tool, drawing the book and withdrawing in a hotel	318

14.2	Landing on the Market	320
14.2.1	The tool to write the market	320
14.2.2	Reality of the market	325
14.2.3	Absolute exchange	327
14.2.4	Exchange as a category of its own	329
14.2.5	Option volatility smile and exchange	332
14.2.6	The heart of the market	336
PART IV CONVERSION OF CREDIT INTO EQUITY, OR THE GENESIS OF THE MARKET		341
15	History of the Market	343
15.1	The Conversion	343
15.1.1	The significance of the convertible bond	343
15.1.2	Genesis of the market	343
15.1.3	Passivity and activity	344
15.1.4	The moment of the conversion	345
15.2	Possibility versus Contingency	347
15.2.1	Contingent claim versus projected possibility	347
15.2.2	Pricing versus evaluation	347
15.2.3	Price and the stochastic process	348
15.2.4	The meaning of the market and the volatility smile	351
15.2.5	Possibility unmasked and return to the virtual	353
15.2.6	Backward possibility	354
15.3	The Market	357
15.3.1	The privilege of the market	357
15.3.2	The place of the trader	358
15.3.3	The trader as a writer of last resort	360
15.3.4	The end of the flight in possibility	361
15.3.5	Summary	362
16	From Debt to Equity	365
16.1	Deduction of the Contingent Claim	365
16.1.1	Debt, death and contingency	365
16.1.2	The morphing of debt into equity	366
16.1.3	The conversion/conservation of writing	367
16.1.4	Company of the future	368
16.2	Deduction of the Exchange	370
16.2.1	The past of debt and the definition of probability	370
16.2.2	The exchange place as the conversion of face	371
16.2.3	Breaking the circle of representation	372
16.2.4	The market without possibility	373
16.2.5	The market as the medium of contingency	375
16.2.6	The impossible exchange	376
16.3	Deduction of Price	379
16.3.1	Price as the 'value' of the contingent claim	379
16.3.2	How does price differentiate?	381
16.3.3	The atemporal pit of price	382

17	The Market and the Philosophy of Difference	385
17.1	The Pit of Price	385
17.1.1	The price of exotics as the key	385
17.1.2	Price as intensive difference	386
17.1.3	Price as meaning	388
17.1.4	Price and the intensive conception of time	390
17.2	The Market and Time	392
17.2.1	The market as noncausal redistribution of probability distributions	392
17.2.2	Creative time	395
17.2.3	Creation as eternal return	397
17.2.4	The single dice-throw	398
17.3	The Market and Difference	403
17.3.1	The pure order of time	403
17.3.2	Internal difference	405
17.3.3	The market as philosophy and conversion as meta-philosophy	406
17.3.4	Immanence and the ontology of multiplicities	409
17.3.5	Reawakening the virtual	411
18	Future of the Market	415
18.1	The Category of Price	415
18.1.1	Price as interface	415
18.1.2	Possibility as a pretext for writing	418
18.1.3	The past of possibility	420
18.1.4	The aleatory point lying at the heart of the contingent claim and the exchange	421
18.1.5	The market, as exchange, is the answer to the impossible exchange	424
18.1.6	Time-to-expiry versus place	426
18.2	The Step Beyond	427
18.2.1	Reactivating the conversion	427
18.2.2	Possibility is only a tool	429
18.2.3	The pricing tool	432
18.2.4	Making money in the market	433
18.2.5	The market as alternative to probability	435
18.2.6	Suppressing possibility	436
18.2.7	Thinking of contingency instead	437
18.2.8	Beyond the financial market	439
18.3	Place and Contingency	440
18.3.1	The sense of place	440
18.3.2	The power of price	442
18.3.3	A life in contingency	443
18.3.4	Success and succession	445
18.3.5	Becoming the market	446
18.4	Conclusion	448

19 Appendix 1 The Logic and Mathematics of Regime Switching	449
A1.1 Description of the Regime-Switching Model	450
A1.1.1 Regimes	450
A1.1.2 Risk-free yield curve	451
A1.1.3 Dividends	451
A1.1.4 Regime probability	452
A1.2 General Backward Equations	452
A1.2.1 Stand-alone default regime	453
A1.2.2 Coupled nondefault regimes	453
A1.2.3 Fixed dividends	454
A1.2.4 Proportional dividends	454
A1.2.5 Vanilla calls	454
A1.3 Credit Default Swaps	454
A1.3.1 Definitions	454
A1.3.2 Value in default	455
A1.3.3 Backward equation	455
A1.4 Calibration	456
A1.5 Recalibration	456
