

Contents

Series Editor's Preface	v
PART 1—ADVANCES IN THE TECHNIQUES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW
1—State Contracts and their Governing Law:
A Reappraisal	3
State Contracts as New International Legal Acts	5
State Contracts as Contracts entered into by States as Subjects of Public International Law	5
State Contracts as Contracts governed by the International Legal Order	8
Responses to some Objections	22
On it being Impossible for Contracts between States and Individuals to come within the International Legal Order	22
On the Preference Given to Public International Law Rather than Transnational Law for Governing State Contracts	32
2—The International Responsibility of States based on Investment Promotion and Protection Treaties	43
State Responsibility in the International Legal Order	46
Characteristics of States' International Responsibility on the Basis of Protection Treaties	47
Justification of Recourse to International Law	54
State Responsibility on the Basis of Protection Treaties and State Responsibility in Municipal Law	61
In the Absence of any Contractual Connection between Investor and State	63

In the Presence of a Contractual Connection between State and Investor and with a Separate Dispute Settlement Clause from that Provided by the Protection Treaty	67
3—The State’s Normative Freedom and the Question of Indirect Expropriation	87
Indirect Expropriation in International Law	90
In International Law in General	90
In International Investment Law	93
Maintaining the State’s Normative Freedom	96
Results of Case Law	97
The Prudence of Arbitrators	103
PART 2 ADVANCES IN THE THEORETICAL ANALYSIS OF INTERNATIONAL LAW
4—Some Theoretical Reflections on State Contracts	111
The Concept of State in State Contracts	113
The Double Personality of the State in Anzilotti	114
Kelsen’s Dismissal of the Double Personality of the State Presented by Anzilotti	116
The Double Theory of the State in Kelsen	117
Individuals as Subjects of Public International Law	120
Definition of the Subject of International Law	121
Subjects of International Law and ‘Legal Communities’ of International Law	123
Objections Raised by the Dualist Doctrine	126
Relations between Private Persons and their Home State from the Standpoint of International Law	128
On the Inequality between States and Private Persons	130
Private Persons bringing Proceedings before International Courts	133
Dismissal of the Petitio Principii that Individuals can never Bring Proceedings before International Courts	133
Can Mixed ‘Tribunals’ be considered International Courts? The Case of ICSID Tribunals	134
Can ‘Mixed’ Courts be considered International Courts? The Case of Ad Hoc Tribunals	142

Contents	ix
On the Incapacity of General Principles of Law to Internationalise State Contracts	146
Lankarani El-Zein's Argument	146
Dismissal of this Argument	149
On Stabilisation Clauses in State Contracts	153
Stabilisation Clauses are Purportedly not Characteristic of a New Category of Contracts	154
Stabilisation Clauses Purportedly do not Imply the Internationalisation of State Contracts	156
On the Validity and Efficacy of Stabilisation Clauses	157
5—Hans Kelsen and the Advancement of International Law	165
The Nature of International Law	166
Law in its Own Right	166
Reprisals and War: Sanctions of Decentralised International Law	167
Centralisation of International Law: Collective Security and Compulsory Jurisdiction	168
Changes in International Law: Towards what sort of Civitas Maxima ?	171
Centralisation /Decentralisation of Legal Orders	172
The International Organisation as a Comparatively Centralised Legal Order and its Relations with the State	173
The European Union as a Possible Horizon of International Law	176
Changes in International Law: Internationalised State Contracts and the Status of Private Persons in the International Legal Order	179
The Notion of a State Contract	181
The Possibility of Individuals to be Limited Subjects of International Law	182
6—The Notion of Civitas Maxima in Kelsen's Work	189
Civitas Maxima and the Primacy of International Law	191
Civitas Maxima and Kelsen's Conception of Legal Orders	195
The World State: Cognitive Postulate or State Stricto Sensu ?	198
Conclusion	201

x	Contents
7—	International Courts in an Interstate Society	203
	The Decisive Criterion for the Existence of an International Legal Order	204
	Law as a System of Justiciable Rules	204
	International Law as a System of Minimally Justiciable Rules	207
	Optional Courts and Mandatory Courts	207
	Mandatory Judgement and Enforceable Judgement	209
	Judicial Third Party and Political Third Party	211
	International Courts and the Advancement of the International Legal Order	212
	Primacy of the Rule of Law and State Sovereignty	212
	Judicial Interpretation and Self-Interpretation of International Law	212
	Legal Disputes and Political Disputes	214
	The Development of International Law	215
	The End of Anarchy	216
8—	The State within the Meaning of International Law and the State within the Meaning of Municipal Law (On the Theory of the Dual Personality of the State)	219
	The Two Sides or Double Personality of the State	221
	The Two Sides of the State in Classical French and German Doctrines	221
	The Double Personality of the State in Italian Internationalist Doctrine	226
	The Double Personality of the State: Kelsen's Analysis	239
	Ambiguities in Kelsen	240
	The Double Personality of the State in a Normativist Conception of Legal Orders: A Proposal	247
	PART 3—EUROPEAN UNION LAW: INTERNATIONAL LAW SURPASSED OR INTERNATIONAL LAW ADVANCING?
9—	On the Legal Nature of the European Communities	257
	Centralisation/Decentralisation of a Legal Order	258
	The Kelsenian Interpretation of Federalism	259

Contents xi

The European Community: A Relatively Centralised International Legal Order	260
The Importance of Central Norms	261
The Existence of a Court to Rule on the Apportionment of Jurisdiction between the Central Order and the Local Orders	262
The Direct Applicability of Community Law	263
The Primacy of Community Law	264
The International Legal Order/The State Legal Order	266
Of the Birth of the State	267
Of the Legal Nature of the Community and its Future Development	270
10—A Federation of Nation States or a Federal State?	273
The Reasons for Community Europe's Dysfunctions	274
Federation and the Constitutional Theory of the State	276
Confederation of States and Federal State	276
The Federation (J Fischer) or Federation of Nation State (J Delors)	277
Sovereignty and Nation States	279
Sovereignty	280
Nation States	283
The European Federation: Squaring the Circle	284
11—Is there a European Approach to Human Rights?	287
Introduction	287
The West and the Rest: Europe and the Question of the Universality of Human Rights	290
The European Model of Human Rights: A Concrete Universal	292
It is Possible to Conceive of the Universal and Human Rights Starting from Other Traditions	296
The Universal and the Particular in Human Rights	297
The European Universal and its Relations with other Civilisations	299
The Universal and the Eternal: The Birth of Universal Human Rights in and through History	304

Europe and the West: The European (Properly Speaking) Dimension of Human Rights	306
Birth, Disappearance and Rebirth of Human Rights in Europe	306
The Enforced Hibernation of the Philosophy of Human Rights in Europe	306
Barbarity in Europe and the Renewal of the Philosophy and Positive Law of Human Rights	311
Certain Features of the European Concept of Human Rights	312
Conclusion	325
Index	327

<http://www.pbookshop.com>