

Contents

Prologue	xiii
1	Setting the Tone: The Act of Settlement and the Emergence of the Balance of Powers	1
	The Act of Settlement	7
	Quamdiu se bene gesserint	10
2	1900–1960: The Declining Role of the English Judiciary	14
	The Edwardian Era	14
	The War to End All Wars, Economic Strife and the Long Weekend	20
	High Formalism, World War and Increasing Irrelevance	26
3	The Gradual U-Turn	30
	The Old Order Regroups	30
	The Changing Political Environment	33
	And Who Were these Judges?	37
	The 1960s and 1970s: Confusion and Renewal	39
4	The Years of Conservative Government (1979-1997)	45
	Europe and Its Influence	46
	Government and Judiciary	49
	The Judges' Work	53
	The Thatcher Effect	55
	The Judges Themselves	57
5	Jurisprudence or Politics	62
	The Formalist Tradition	62
	The Public Debate	67
	Moral and Social Policies Creep in	73
6	Balance of Powers: The Independence of Individual Judges	76
	An International Virus	76
	The Independence of Individual Judges in England	79
	Independence, Objectivity and Impartiality	82
	The Impact of the Balance of Powers on Judicial Independence	85

7	The Balance of Powers: The Judges as a Separate Branch of Government?	89
	The US Parallels	89
	The Lord Chancellor	91
	The Law Lords	92
	The Appointment of Judges	95
	The Apparently Irreconcilable Concepts of Parliamentary Sovereignty and Judicial Independence	96
	Overview	97
8	New Labour in Power	100
	The Lord Chancellorship	100
	Human Rights	104
	Pinochet	107
	Human Rights and Judicial Power	112
	New Labour and the New Millennium	116
9	The Second Coming	119
	Reprise	119
	The Lord Chancellor, the Supreme Court and the Judges	126
	The Human Rights Act meets Bruce Blunkett	129
10	The Future	137
	The Issues	141
	The Judiciary	146
	Parables from Abroad	149
	The Need for a Supreme Court	150
	Bibliography	155
	Index	163