

Acknowledgements

It is commonly assumed that academia is an isolating occupation, where one's primary companions are books, databases, and computers. However, while this book has of course necessitated the companionship of these three things, it has also been greatly enriched by the insights of many people around the world who have given generously of their time and expertise.

In particular, the project has benefited from fieldwork undertaken in the Pacific island countries of Kiribati and Tuvalu, and in Bangladesh and India. I am very grateful to all those who agreed to be interviewed for the project, whose insights helped me to understand the impacts of climate change on their homes.

I am indebted to colleagues who were willing to bounce around ideas with me, share literature, and give feedback on evolving arguments. I thank them for their support and encouragement, and particularly for pushing me to look at new angles, approaches, and sources. While there are too many people to list individually, special thanks go to Jon Barnett, John Campbell, Jean-François Durieux, Alice Edwards, Elizabeth Ferris, Rolf Einar Fife, Laurie Fransman, François Gemenne, Matthew Gibney, Guy Goodwin-Gill, Nina Hall, Agnès Hurwitz, Walter Kälin, Vikram Kolmannskog, Rosemary Rayfuse, Volker Türk, Koko Warner, and Roger Zetter. In particular, I would like to thank Maryanne Loughry for being a wonderful travel companion during our fieldwork in the Pacific, and for the rich discussions we had about the research, especially during its formative stages.

I have been fortunate to have the invaluable support of a number of highly talented research assistants during the course of this project. I would particularly like to thank Emily Crawford, my Research Associate for the first year, and Trina Ng, my research assistant for the following 18 months, for their excellent work. Trina's eye for detail and capacity to turn around work in record time was a great asset. Emma Dunlop and Naomi Hart scored the unenviable tasks of assisting me with proofreading, cross-referencing, and indexing, carrying them out with precision and goodwill. Matthew Albert, Kate Purcell, and Emma Truswell also provided ad hoc assistance at various points of the project, for which I am grateful.

This research would not have been possible without the support of a three-year Australian Research Council Discovery Grant. It enabled me to undertake fieldwork, teaching relief, and to employ research assistants, and gave me the space to think about the big picture. I am very grateful for this opportunity.

I have benefited from an exceptionally supportive research environment at the Law Faculty of the University of New South Wales. I thank the Dean, David Dixon, and the former and current Associate Deans (Research), Kathy Bowrey and Janet Chan, for fostering this research culture and for their personal encouragement. I also thank the current and former Directors of the Gilbert + Tobin Centre of Public Law, Andrew Lynch and George Williams, for their support and generosity.

Thank you also to Lincoln College at the University of Oxford for hosting me as a Visiting Fellow in 2009. In particular, I thank Paul Langford, Simon Gardner, Christopher McCrudden, and Louise Durning.

I would also like to thank John Louth, Merel Alstein, Anthony Hinton, Zoë Organ, and Matthew Humphrys at Oxford University Press for their professionalism and patience throughout the writing and editing process, as well as the copyeditors and proofreaders who worked so carefully on the manuscript.

As always, my family has been exceptionally supportive, interested, and tolerant. I thank them for their understanding when the books, databases, computers, and travel beckoned. Finally, I thank Ben Saul, my intrepid fieldwork companion in Bangladesh and India, for his partnership on the homefront.

The material in this book is current as at October 2011.

Jane McAdam
Sydney
December 2011

<http://www.pbookshop.com>

Contents

Table of Treaties, Other International Instruments, and Legislation	xi
List of Abbreviations	xvii
Introduction	1
I. The Book's Structure	8
1. Conceptualizing Climate Change-Related Movement	15
I. Introduction	15
II. The Nature of Displacement	17
III. The Importance of Context	30
IV. The 'Invisibility' of Climate Change-Related Movement	36
V. Conclusion: A Human Rights Approach	38
2. The Relevance of International Refugee Law	39
I. Introduction	39
II. The Relevance of the 1951 Refugee Convention	42
III. The Relevance of Regional Refugee Instruments: OAU Convention and Cartagena Declaration	48
IV. The Relevance of Refugee Law Concepts	49
V. Conclusion	50
3. Climate Change-Related Movement and International Human Rights Law: The Role of Complementary Protection	52
I. Introduction	52
II. Right to Life	55
III. Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment	63
IV. Other Rights that May Give Rise to Complementary Protection	79
V. The Role of the ICESCR	82
VI. Analytical Assessment	83
VII. Do States Have Obligations Towards the Displaced under International Environmental Law?	90
VIII. Conclusion	98
4. State Practice on Protection from Disasters and Related Harms	99
I. Introduction	99
II. Legislative Protection Responses	100
III. Ad Hoc Humanitarian Schemes	106
IV. Migration Responses	115
V. Conclusion	117

5. ‘Disappearing States’, Statelessness, and Relocation	119
I. Introduction	119
II. Conceptual Problems: Macro versus Micro	121
III. The Nature of ‘Disappearance’	123
IV. What is a ‘State’?	128
V. Governments in Exile	135
VI. Statelessness?	138
VII. En Masse Relocation	143
VIII. Self-Governing Alternative	153
IX. Conclusion	158
6. Moving with Dignity: Responding to Climate Change-Related Mobility in Bangladesh	161
I. Introduction	161
II. The Impacts of Climate Change on Movement in Bangladesh	163
III. The Likely Nature of Movement	166
IV. Options for Law and Policy Reform	173
V. Conclusion	183
7. ‘Protection’ or ‘Migration’? The ‘Climate Refugee’ Treaty Debate	186
I. Introduction	186
II. A ‘Climate Refugee’ Treaty	187
III. Empirical Evidence on Movement	193
IV. Multicausality	196
V. Political Obstacles to a New Treaty	197
VI. Government Advocacy for International Responses	200
VII. Migration Options	201
VIII. Conclusion	210
8. Institutional Governance	212
I. Introduction	212
II. Spheres of Governance	215
III. Institutional Responses	219
IV. Regional Responses	233
V. Conclusion	235
9. Overarching Normative Principles	237
I. Introduction	237
II. Protection from Natural Disasters	241
III. Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement	250
IV. Suggested Elements of a Guiding Framework	252
V. Overarching Normative Principles	256
VI. Conclusion	266

Conclusion

267

Appendix

271

Bibliography

281

Index

305

<http://www.pbookshop.com>

<http://www.pbookshop.com>