

Table of contents

Introduction

I. Different legal teams will have different solutions

1. Rapid integration of digital technology in the delivery of legal services is the new 'killer app'
2. The current state of play with legal practice
3. Will we hire lawyers through an app?
4. COVID-19 is a disruptive moment that will favour challenger firms
5. COVID-19 and the delivery of legal services through digital platforms
6. The medium is the message: how legal services are delivered is becoming more important than who delivers them
7. 'Legal teams', not 'law firms' + 'in-house': the death of the siloed lawyer
8. Conclusion: reimagining the legal profession post-COVID-19

II. Remote working is here to stay

1. Location, location
2. Home sweet home
3. All change!
4. Change as a constant
5. Change as an opportunity
6. Change as a threat
7. Change as a force for good

8. Health and safety for legal teams post-COVID-19 – uneducated guesses?
9. Nobody knows what the return to work for legal teams will look like
10. “You must work from home if you can”
11. COVID-19, difficult conversations and the unspoken word
12. Glimmers of hope: will ‘work from work’ be seen as something special and different from ‘work from home’?
13. Grief for what was lost
14. The unasked question is now asked: can UK employers mandate COVID-19 vaccines for employees?
15. Legal teams after COVID-19 – trauma and transformation

III. Culture and community

1. Trust me, I’m a lawyer
2. Trust under attack
3. Trust rediscovered

IV. Partners will foot the bill

1. Yes, but maybe not straight away
2. Survival of the fittest?
3. What’s next?
4. Think the unthinkable

V. A changed profession: will old values still triumph?

1. Keep calm and carry on lawyering?
2. Or might fortune favour the brave?
3. Brave? Me?!
4. Flexible lawyers – great lawyers
5. The brakes are coming off – which way now?

VI. Closing remarks

Notes

About the authors

About Globe Law and Business